

Oxford Democrat.

VOLUME 3.

PARIS, MAINE, TUESDAY, MAY 24, 1836.

NUMBER 41

OXFORD DEMOCRAT.

IS PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY BY GEORGE W. M. ILLIOTT.
TERMS.—One dollar and fifty cents in advance.
—Two dollars at the end of the year.
No paper discontinued till all dues are paid, but at the option of the Publisher.
ADVERTISEMENTS inserted on the usual terms;
the proprietor not being accountable for any error in any advertisement beyond the amount charged for it.
COMMUNICATIONS, and LETTERS on business must be addressed to the publisher, Post-paid.

HALINA RADZIVIL: Or: The Battle of Warsaw.

A TALE IN POLAND.

By Professor Thackeray—author of "Polish Eloquence," "Downfall of Nations," etc.

On the evening which preceded the memorable revolution of Warsaw in 1830, two Poles in military apparel proceeded, in deep conversation, along the winding banks of the Vistula.

The costume of the elder, consisting of the caftan, girdle, sabre, and yellow boots, betokened him to be of noble lineage. His attendant, a youth about eighteen years of age, wore the insignia of the military academy in Warsaw.

"Sire," exclaimed the younger, as he gracefully threw back the dark flowing ringlets which shaded his manly forehead, and fixed his beaming eyes on the face of his companion, "we are now without the walls of the Krage; gold has been purchased for me this interview with my noble father; perhaps, added he, as a dark expression of melancholy overpowered his youthful countenance, "perhaps the last."

"Does the duke, then," said the elder, seek the destruction of the ancient house of Plater?
He shall yet know."

"Speak softly!" said the young man;—"the very winds of Poland are traitors to liberty."

The tyrant seeks the ruin of more houses than ours. Twelve noble scions are doomed, tomorrow, to the dungeons of Warsaw. But, continued he, as his flashing eye expressed the daring energies of his mind, "the cup is full—the consummation has come. Ere you orb reillumes the banks of our ancient river, the Russians tyrant must flee, or perish! Two hundred youths of Poland, like myself, have sworn on the altar of their country's wrongs to assert her freedom, or swell the hecatombs which the monster's vengeance has already lighted."

"Noble but ill-fated project!" exclaimed the elder Plater: "what chance for freedom has Poland, before the power of the Russian autocrat?
Abandon the enterprise my son—it is useless. The iron bonds will be more strongly riveted. Failure will erase the name of Poland from the page of future history, and fill the mines of Siberia with the best and bravest of her sons."

"Father," replied Casimir Plater, "I want nothing with honor que de se rendit; forty thousand Poles will assemble round our standard: 'Deo adjuvante non timendum!'— shall be our motto. The free in Europe will awake from their lethargy, and fly to our successor. The die is cast—we have passed the Rubicon—retreat is impossible, and triumph—glory!"

"But, Sire," continued young Plater, "I tremble for the house of Radzivil, when the torch of liberty is lighted. Palina Radzivil must not fall into the monster's power. Speed to the Prince; warn him to place her beyond the Polish frontiers; I will see her to-morrow. I see my guards are approaching. Adieu, best of fathers! Arm yourself for the events of the morrow: the name of Plater shall not be dishonored by your son."

Two gens d'armes, clad in the Russian police, dress, now approached. "Your time has expired, young man," said they. "I am ready," replied Casimir, as he pressed the hand of his parent, and departed for the state dungeon of the capitol.

The feelings which agitated the bosoms of the patriotic Poles were not unknown at the palace of Belvedere. Spies had been placed in the mansion of every noble family, and the royal agent of the autocrat was aware that some greater movement was about to take place; but fear was not an element in Constantine's character, and he trusted that by striking a decisive blow at some of the most exalted in Warsaw, the spark of freedom would be extinguished before it could burst into a flame. In the morning succeeding the interview between Count Plater and his son, Warsaw wore the appearance of a military camp. The drums beat to arms. A military commission was opened, at the head of which Constantine had placed himself.

At ten o'clock, a military escort proceeded to the state prison, and demanded, in the name of Grand Duke, the military students, confined on charge of treason. They were immediately surrendered. A few moments brought them before the tribunal of the tyrant.

Plater, which a firm stem and dignified air,
first ascended the platform, before his judges.
With a contemptuous expression of countenance he gazed around on this mockery of justice, as the chief commissioner exclaimed, "I denounce Casimir Plater a traitor to his emperor and his country!"

"Poland has no traitor among her free born nobles," replied the undaunted youth. "Behold thy companions," continued the commissioner, pointing toward the military students who had assembled in the hall of the tribunal, "they shall testify against thee."

The bosom of the young soldier heaved with indignation: he exchanged a glance with his comrades; it was enough. Then, casting a look of disdain on his oppressors, he replied:
"No Pole ever committed dishonor."

Thou hast been sworn against, as a rebel and a traitor," muttered the Duke.
"Show me my accuser," retorted to youth.

"The mines of Siberia are not yet filled," continued Constantine, "a descendant of the noble house of Plater would grace the earth-wrought dungeons of Tobolsk."

"Prince," replied Casimir, "there is a point at which resistance becomes a virtue, and silence a crime. Posterity will demand at your hands a retribution for the wrongs of Poland.
History will record this military tribunal, where power usurps the seat of judgment, and vengeance the throne of mercy—from which the accuser is banished, and the accused condemned. The future assertors of the rights of nations and of men will re-echo from Warsaw to St. Petersburg this unholy mockery of the great attributions of justice in the court of kings—
They will record their verdict against the faith of princes, on the ruin of Poland's freedom, in characters of blood."

"Could I alone," continued Casimir, "be offered as a proprietary sacrifice between Poland and her wrongs—could the yawning gulfs of your northern capital receive me as the last of their Polish victims, I would, like another Curius, plunge into the lake and save my country. But the descendant of the house of Plater is a fraction in the vast unit of destruction—Where is the ancient house in Warsaw, that mourns not some inmate whose groans reverberate through your Siberian dungeons, until the genius of misery shrieks affrighted at the sound? the youth in full vigor of manhood who enters to day, and whose head grows hoary in your subterranean prisons, as the eternal snows which cover their unhalloved summits."

"Let the youthful hero be shorn of his hair, scourged, and sent off for Siberia," said Constantine, as Plater concluded his address; "away with him, my guards!"

At this moment a Polish lady, elegantly attired in a garb of deep mourning, rushed through the crowd, and threw herself at the feet of the Duke, in the hall of the tribunal. It was Lodoiska, the mother of Casimir Plater. The council stood in mute astonishment, until Constantine exclaimed: "Who thus presumes to outrage herself in the courts of Warsaw?"

"The mother of the youth thou hast but now doomed to slavery," replied Lodoiska.

"Great Duke, the noblest element of greatness is mercy; the greatest exercise of power—forgiveness. Let a daughter of unhappy Poland plead before you in behalf of an unfortunate but noble son!"

"My guards, remove this maniac from the hall," exclaimed the tyrant, a woman's tears cannot wash out the blackness of guilt, or obstruct the infliction of its penalties."

"Thou hast truly spoken, tyrant," replied Lodoiska: "a woman's tears cannot wash out the stains of guilt; an angel's could not cleanse the foul pollution of thine. Humanity instinctively shrinks at thy approach; nature recoils in horror, as thy sanguinary hand pollutes her alters, or thy blood tracked footsteps desolate her plains."

"Lodoiska becomes eloquent," replied Constantine, scornfully.

"Hear me, thou descendant of the Czars," resumed the wretched mother: "the blood thou hast wantonly shed has ascended to heaven—it waits thy coming, at the great tribunal. On earth, too, thou shalt have thy trials. You son, which now careers through a cloudless sky, shall not decline while thy feet tread the halls of Belvedere; the ramparts around thy castellated mansion shall be torn from their foundation, and the lofty turrets of thy place gazed with the flag of renovated Poland, before another morning dawns on the city thou hast sacked and desolated."

"Hail! sayest thou so, proud woman?" thundered Constantine, as his lips quivered under the mingled emotions of shame and rage. "Thy evening vespers shall be chanted in the recesses of the citadel. Slaves, manacle this prophetic evil, and convey her to the northern wing of the citadel."

"Lodoiska and Poland!" shouted a thousand voices, as the mother of Casimir approached the doors of the military hall, guarded and chained. "A rescue!—strike down the guard!
A rescue for the mother of Poland!"

The guards in vain attempted to execute their commission. They were instantly overpowered and Lodoiska conducted to the head quarters of her son.

The shout which preceded the liberation of Lodoiska, struck like a thunder bolt on the ear of Constantine. The tyrant trembled. "Summon the Russian regiment!" said he: "To the mansion of Radzivil! Convey its inmates to the place."

Obedient to the orders of the Duke, the Russian cavalry, headed by Col. Kreutz, proceeded to the abode of Prince Radzivil. In a moment the massive doors were burst open, and the lovely Halina, supported by two of the autocrat's guards, was hurried onward in the direction of Belvedere place.

Ere the escort had reached the bridge of Sobieski, Plater and his determined band were there.

"Liberate your captive!" shouted Casimir in a voice that echoed along the shores of the Vistula.

"Who thus opposes the orders of the Grand Duke?" said Kreutz, advancing to the head of his guards.

"Casimir Plater," re-echoed his opponent;
"the sacrifice is too great, the victims too noble, for Russian butchery!"

"Rash youth! thy blood be upon thy head!"
cried Kreutz, waving his sword over the head of Plater. With the velocity of lightning, Casimir unsheathed his weapon. A tremendous blow levelled at the young Poleward as as dexterously parried. He advanced, made a thrust and buried his sword in the bosom of the Russian commander.

"For thy blood, soldier of the autocrat, I shall not be answerable at the final appeal," said Casimir, as he gazed for a moment on the bloody corpse. The Poles, animated by the chivalry of their leader, pierced the ranks of the Russians, and drove them from their position. But Halina Radzivil, during the contest, been conveyed to the palace of Constantine, and was now in the presence of the tyrant.

"Daughter of Radzivil," said he, "it is in thy power to quell the rebellion in which thy countrymen are engaged."

"Dost thou, brother of the autocrat, claim protection at the hands of a captive thou hast enslaved?" replied Halina—a weak, unprotected woman, whom thy rude soldiery have forced from the ancient abode of her fathers to a royal prison?"

"Woman, retorted the duke, "thou art in my power; thy father and brother, in chains, are in the western wing of the palace; before day declines, their heads shall grace your ramparts, should the son of Plater, thy lover, continue the contest. He is now before the most which surrounds the outer gate. Thou hast but commanded, and he withdraws his force. Reflect—and refuse, if thy courage permits. The forfeit is the extinction of the race and name of the house of Radzivil."

"An inhuman, an awful, but a willing sacrifice," cried the heroic girl, "to thee, my beloved Poland!" as she gazed, unappalled, on the features of her royal jailer.

"Thou refusest, then, maid of Warsaw?" said Constantine.

"I scorn the bribe, great as it is, for which I am required to crush the rising liberties of my country," she replied. "Halina Radzivil stands before the tribunal of nations. On her decision may rest the fate of unborn millions. The separation of the soul from the clay which it animates, is a trifle when weighed in the balance against the destinies of the human race—
I know thy power; the frail tenement may sink beneath their execution, but the immortal inhabitant is beyond thy oppression. It shall meet thee at the bar of omnipotence!"

"I have then commanded in vain," said Constantine, as the ashy paleness of death for a moment overspread his countenance. "Proud woman," said he, "thou shalt die, and that before you see reaches his meridian."

"Be it so, if Poland is a queen's sacrifice," said
the unbending daughter of Radzivil—"be it so;
but I fall not unrevenged."

A loud shout proceeding from the direction of the draw-bridge, announced to the tyrant that the outer gates of the palace had yielded to the force of Casimir's assault. He proceeded to the eastern wing of the palace: a youth, bearing the ancient flag of Poland, preceded by a herald, demanded a parley.

"Do the rebels submit?" asked Constantine,
as the youth approached.

"Liberty, not submission, is the watchword of renovated Poland," replied the young warrior:
"we come to require the unconditional surrender of the house of Radzivil," continued he, "or to warn thee, in case of refusal, that ere the dial's shadow points to another hour, thou shalt behold
the palace of Belvedere in ruins."

"Rather demand the traitress trunks of that noble house," scornfully replied Constantine—
"Sentinel, conduct the subjects of Poland to the eastern wing of Belvedere. Let him learn from the lips of Halina the recklessness of his attempt—the certainty of its consequences."

The youth followed his guide through a wide staircase and ascended passages, to the chamber of Halina: the door was opened and there, imploring the protection of Heaven on her hero and her country, knelt the graceful form of her whose life trembled in the balance of her country's fate. The beautiful girl calmly rose from her bending posture, as the sentinel announced the entrance of a stranger. The guide retired, and the young Pole, muffled in a military surcoat, entered the apartment.

Halina stretched forth her hand; "My countrymen," said she, "whether friend or stranger, you are welcome to the forced abode of Radzivil's daughter!"

The youth gazed back his cloak; it was Casimir Plater!

"How hast thou passed the guards?" said the astounded girl, trembling for the fate of her lover.

"By the command of the tyrant," replied Pla-
ter. "I bore to him a flag of truce, and unknown, have gained admittance. Beloved of my heart!" continued he, "what says the monster?"

"He demands the withdrawal of the troops or a forfeiture which he deems equivalent," replied Halina.

"What is the forfeiture?" said Casimir, as he perceived the blood forsake the countenance of Halina.

"Seek not to know, noble Plater," replied his companion, "compared with the accomplishment of thy great design, the forfeiture is a drop of water to the ocean."

"Halina," said the young hero, "thou wilt not deny my request: we may meet no more—
What is the forfeiture this royal wretch demands?"

"The destruction of the house of Radzivil," replied the high-souled daughter.

"Inhuman monster!—thou hast not yet sufficiently glutted thyself in human blood, but that the most noble house in Warsaw must fill the measure of thy crimes! Halina, I cannot sacrifice thee. Poland must fall!"

"Not while Casimir Plater claims the hand of Halina Radzivil," she replied. "Treasured as thou art in my heart," continued she, "I would scorn the proffered hand of a traitor to Poland,
and reject an alliance with thy noble family, should the sun of my country's liberties set in the liberation of her captive daughter. Proceed in the glorious cause. The stake for which thou contendest is priceless and incomparable.
I will not say to thee, in this hour of trial, Poland has other daughters. I know thy faith—Yon orb," said she, pointing to the sun "is not more pure, nor his returns more constant—Commit thy Halina to Heaven—thy courage and perseverance to thy country. Depart, beloved Plater," continued Halina, as she placed her miniature in his hand; "on the day of trial look on this. Yet stay a moment; lend me thy dagger. I shudder at the thought of self-destruction; yet are there cases in which even that act may be a virtue."

"What is the issue of thy interview with the daughter of Radzivil?" said Constantine, as Casimir descended toward the lower corridor of the palace."

"The secrets of Poland's daughter are secure with her sons," replied Casimir. "Thou wilt know, ere evening shades thy palace. Am I at liberty to depart?"

"Thou art," returned Constantine.

Young Plater, preceded by his herald, soon reached his assembled companions. A shout which shook the walls of the tyrant's palace, announced his arrival.

"What is the answer of the Duke," demanded
a hundred voices.

"He refuses to release the captives," replied Casimir.

"Storm the palace!—raze the monster's mansion to the dust!—cried the military companions of Casimir—"Poland and Liberty!"

"My comrades," said Casimir, "caution must be our watch-word. We must be wary in our approach to the den of the monster. He must have a chance to escape. The fate of the house of Radzivil depends on this circumstance: and who among you would require the possession of the tyrant, at the sacrifice of this noble family?"

"Not a son of Poland," rejoined his companions. "Let the Duke escape."

"Three cheers!" said Plater, "and then for the palace!"

"The acclamation reached the ears of Constantine. The words 'storm the palace!' had scarcely fallen from the enthusiastic Poles, ere he entered the chamber of Halina.

"Inhuman maid," exclaimed he, "why dost thou court death?"

"I court the freedom of Poland," she replied, even at the price which it has cost decreed—Know, Duke, the blood of Kaciuko still runs in the veins of Poland's daughters."

"My guards," said Constantine, conduct hither Prince Radzivil and his son."

The soldiers retired at the Command, and returned with the noble captives.

"Behold the offering," said Halina, as she gazed on her father and brother; "behold the victims for the sacrifice. But thou, turning to Constantine, "art not the officiating priest at the altar?"

"Say it thou so, maiden?" replied Constantine.
"Executioners, approach!"

"Stand back! ye murdering ministers—ye accused agents of another's crime!" exclaimed Halina, as her eye turned from the assassins to their employer: "the blood you seek is too pure for your cowardly daggers!"

"I command you to do your duty!" thundered the Duke. "The ruffians again approached to fulfill the awful commission."

"Take thou the reward of guilt!" said the daughter of Radzivil, as she plunged the point of Plater into the bosom of the foremost assassin: "a pity, yet have destroyed thee!"

Constantine, petrified with astonishment, gazed with conscious horror on the body of the executioner, as it writhed in the agonies of death.

"The blood of that man shall be demanded at thy hand, Russian Duke," said Halina, "when we meet before the bar of Heaven. Mine was an act of justice, not revenge. The life of a parent demanded the poniard of a daughter—Thou seest how strong, when virtue nerves them, are the arms of Sarmatia's maidens."

A crash in the court yard now announced that the inner gates of the palace had been forced.
"To the rescue of the Radzivils!" was heard in every quarter. "If they be safe, give quarter to the tyrant—if not, be his fate as theirs."

Plater rushed to the eastern chamber: in a moment, the door was opened. My Halina safe! Spirit of the Universe, I thank thee!"
said he, as he clasped the lovely girl to his bosom.

"Where is the tyrant?" exclaimed the inflamed soldiery, "He has escaped," said Halina, "by a secret passage."

"Mother, I have fulfilled thy prophecy," said Plater; "the evening sun has not found the tyrant in the palace of Belvedere. And now, my Halina, I demand thy bridal hand at the altar, before the face of Heaven, and on the dawn of Poland's regeneration.—[Knickerbocker.]

SOMETHING LIKE A PEEZE.

A trifling rumour was kicked up a few nights
since somewhere "down town," in the course of which several "blooms" made no small display of the "science," and some first rate "game chickens" were "wide awake" on the occasion to the no small discomfiture of the "Charles's"

who happened to "bundle up" some of the
"rummies" and "toat" them to the "wanderer's home." The origin of the "flare up," was at a "hoe down" the refined cognomen for select ball, and as our informant states, an affair of the heart was at the bottom of it. The original combatants were a tailor and a wheelwright—
at least so the story goes the latter having too ardently expressed his sentiments to the "lady love" of the former, and enlaid half her heart.

W. shall endeavor to describe the "breeze" in the manner of our informant.

"Dang my buttons!" exclaimed the tailor, clenching his fist. "I'll stick your jacket for you, you threadbare pattern of mortality, I'm as hard and as hot as a goose—and can walk needles into you!"

"Old Virginity never tire!" replied the wheelwright, "I'm spoke's-man on this occasion—Hammer away, I'll rivet the hub—you haint-
a-going for to come huckleberry over my pic-nimon no how!"

"Smash his top lights," said a sailor, "give him your longline—pepper his hull—walk into his figurehead."

"I'll play second to you!" shouted the sid-dler, "sound his key-note—knock him into ten demiseniquavers—make him reel he's only semibreve."

"Semi-brave yourself!" said a tallow-chandler, "you'll boil over—your's a wicked man, and I'll draw the fat out your suet in short order."

"He'll burst his boiler," exclaimed an engineer, "shut his valve—go on high pressure system—come the lever over him and make both paddles work at once."

"Batter his face," said a printer, he's not justified in imposing on a man—knock him into pi—use your mallet well—chase him up—
give him the shooting-stick, drive up his quoin, gouge his eye, and he's a gone case!"

"Square accounts with him," rejoined a clerk
give him a receipt in full, double entry my boy rib his point for him, and make the real red ink flow, per contra creditor!"

"Who's afraid?" vociferated a doctor,
"phlebotomize, operate on his exterior, anatomizize him, lay him out with a galvanic battery, come the pestle over him."

"Heel him," added a shoemaker, "he's got no sole—was it into him—give him his last, and hammer his upper leather—his grinding strap is broken—give him no quarters."

"Trades and professions thus discordantly mingled, with some of the guardians of the night interfered, and put their veto on their unpropositions proceedings."

"Keep peace," said they, "or we'll make him one peace of you all. Come, Moser—we night watches never go on tick—for we are knights of the night, and though we keep our beats, yet we are not sparing of them, when occasion requires. So walk Spanish the whole of ye!"

Balt. Visitor.

The Laws. The following emphatic passage is from a sermon recently preached in Boston by the Rev. N. L. Frothingham.

"Take the laws as they are—they are the only barrier between you and the robber's viclence and the assassin's knife; and I would say, revere them. Thwart them not. Stand by their decision. Come to their help, all good men and true. Let them not be made ineffectual by our weak reluctances. Let them not be brought into mistrust by your objections and remonstrances and outcries, all they have no majesty left. Let them not be undermined by the wasteful and wasteful tale of a mistaken philanthropy. In the name of the divine equity, for the sake of the common protection, stay them not in their righteous though terrible operations. Every attempt to invade their sphere decrees a public wrong. Every voice that is sworn to judge only according to the law and conscience, and then refuses to speak but according to private pity, is false to its oaths."

The prospectus for an Extra Globe, issued by Messrs. Blair & Rives, occupies about three columns of their paper, is very ably written, and contains a large amount of interesting and valuable political information, and a full history of the plans of the piebald opposition in reference to the approaching presidential canvass. We have not sufficient room to enable us to publish the prospectus in full—but we call the reader's particular attention to the extracts which follow:

"It is now settled that the three opposition candidates, as first presented in the several sections of the Union, to keep the party from banding, as lieutenants of the real leaders of the coalition, shall continue in the field. Electoral tickets in favour of Harrison, will be proposed only in the States of VERMONT, NEW YORK, PENNSYLVANIA, MARYLAND, DELAWARE, OHIO, INDIANA, and KENTUCKY, eight States, giving one hundred thirty-three electoral votes. Webster's ticket will be confined to MAINE, NEW HAMPSHIRE, MASSACHUSETTS, CONNECTICUT, RHODE ISLAND, and NEW JERSEY, six States, giving fifty-one electoral votes. White is the candidate of the coalition in the South, and their electoral tickets are to be run in his name only in the States of VIRGINIA, NORTH CAROLINA, SOUTH CAROLINA, GEORGIA, TENNESSEE, LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI, ILLINOIS, ALABAMA, and MISSOURI, ten States, giving precisely one hundred electoral votes. It requires one hundred and forty-five votes (the majority or two hundred and eighty-eight electoral votes) to elect a President. It is obvious, therefore, that if the opposition candidates were each to succeed in carrying their electoral tickets in the several States where they are presented, and the Democratic candidates were defeated in them all, that no election would be made by the People. It is conceded, however, even by the opposition, that Mr. Van Buren will obtain the vote of several States in each of the districts assigned to the separate tickets of White, Webster, and Harrison. The only hope of the opposition rests on the possibility of sectional and personal influences operating so far in favour of their candidates, as to prevent the Republican candidate from obtaining the requisite majority, and thus devolve the election on the House.

In the House the Federal party have a control over the following States: MASSACHUSETTS, VERMONT, MARYLAND, DELAWARE, OHIO, KENTUCKY, SOUTH CAROLINA, ALABAMA, LOUISIANA, and TENNESSEE—10.

There is a Democratic representation from MAINE, NEW HAMPSHIRE, RHODE ISLAND, CONNECTICUT, NEW YORK, NEW JERSEY, PENNSYLVANIA, VIRGINIA, GEORGIA, INDIANA, and ILLINOIS—11.

The States of NORTH CAROLINA, MISSISSIPPI, and MISSOURI, are equally divided in their representation in the House.

If, then, the avowed object of the opposition—avowed in their public presses—should be accomplished in giving the choice of Chief Magistrate to the House, (each State voting through the ballots of a majority of its representatives in the House,) it would follow that there would be no election, unless some members of the Federal phalanx in the House should comply with the will of their constituents, and vote against their party, for their own inclination, and principles; or unless a portion of the Democratic side should surrender the cause of their constituents.

Their presses, once all in discord, are now in happy harangue. The three President candidates are linked together by their nominees for the Vice-Presidency. Granger's name is associated with Webster's ticket in Massachusetts, and with Harrison's in Ohio. Tyler's ticket bears the white flag in Virginia, and blends it with that of Harrison in Maryland. Granger is to identify antipathy with Webster in the east, and Harrison in the west. Tyler is to reconcile nullification to White and the severe section of the Force Bill—and, at the same time, reconcile the advocates of southern principles to Harrison and the American System. The effect of these arrangements are a ready visible to every observer. The friends of Clay, of Calhoun, of Webster, of the Bank, all support White in the south. They are all embodied on Harrison in the middle section, and on Webster himself in the east. There is no symptom of dissension in the allotted divisions among Harrison men, Webster men, White men. The affinity is so perfect that all the White men will vote for Harrison north of the Potomac, and for Webster north of the Hudson; and so Webster's friends are for Harrison west, and White south—Harrison on his part, with equal courtesy in return, resigning his friends on one hand to Webster, and on the other to White, within the sphere of their respective tickets.

If the artifices of the opposition prevail in bringing the election to the House, they must then encounter new obstacles which only can be vanquished by perpetrating a succession of enormities against the rights of the People. The first step is to unite the votes of the ten States represented in the House by a majority of Federal members from each, upon one of the coalition candidates. If Harrison should be the elect of the party in the House, Webster and White must vote their quota of States for him, although he shall not have received one vote from the People north or south, and although it is clearly admitted, by the fact of not running a ticket in his name in the two sections to be transferred, that he could not contend there successfully with the Democratic candidate, yet the votes of the White and Webster representatives in the House must be given to him against the will of their constituents. If it should be White's lot to be the candidate of the factions in the House, (we suppose it will be determined by lot,) then Webster's and Harrison's friends must vote for him, although nothing can be more notorious than the fact that Judge W. he cannot obtain one electoral vote from the People north of the Potomac and Ohio. This is universally admitted on all hands, and yet he is to be passed into the House to have the votes of States given him by members of Congress, whose constituents utterly abjure him as President. If the tables should be turned so as to present Mr. Webster as the antagonist of Democracy in the secret ballot of the House, we have no doubt that the ten States would be more cheerfully made over to him by the disguised Federalists misrepresenting the southern and middle sections, than to elect one of his colleagues in the game of three pluck one.

But the ten States now in the power of the opposition cannot give them the Presidency. They must have the three equally divided States to compass their purposes. They cannot hope to seduce the delegations of Pennsylvania, of Virginia, of New York, in each of which the Democratic majorities are from two to one, to three to one—nor can they hope to operate upon the delegations of Maine, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, Indiana, Illinois, and Georgia, where the delegations are unanimously Democratic, with the exception of two members in Maine, and a single doubtful individual in another State. The coalition must, therefore, calculate either on defeating the election of a President altogether, or on obtaining the votes of the isolated republican members from Mississippi and Missouri, as well as everying North Carolina, by the vote of the individual in be elected from the lately vacated district.

In eight of the States on which the coalition rely, they can only hope to succeed by the vote of a single Representative. In Louisiana, Delaware, Alabama, North Carolina, Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio, and Maryland, the balance is turned by a single vote in their favor, if their best hopes are realized. They expect the vote of Ohio, though the vote of Mr. Spangler, who admits that he represents a district in which there is a large Democratic majority; and in Maryland they must turn the scale by the vote of Mr. Turner, whose district is also decidedly Democratic. The election of one of the opposition candidates, under these circumstances, would present the spectacle not only of three of the greatest States in the Union, New York, Pennsylvania, and Virginia, entitled to ninety-five electoral votes, weighed down by the vote of a single member from each of the three smallest, Delaware, Mississippi, and Missouri, but it exhibits the monstrous injustice of eight States, each carried by the vote of a single member, counterbalancing not only the great States alluded to, and their overwhelming Democratic majorities, but five other States, Maine, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Georgia, and Indiana, in all of which the delegations are unanimous, save three votes—the eight Democratic States, in the electoral college, being entitled to one hundred and forty-one votes—the eight counterbalancing States only sixty-six. The whole thirteen States relied on by the coalition to give them the election, being entitled to one hundred and twenty-one votes; while the eleven Democratic States, to be voted down by them in the House are entitled to one hundred and fifty-seven, a majority of thirty-six in the electoral college.

What would be the result of an election of Chief Magistrate obtained by the prostration of every principle, moral and political, which gave being to the system under which we live?—Obtained by putting public opinion under foot—prostrating the representative body—and making the forms of the Government a mere machinery to work out the schemes of adroit politicians, contriving to render it a great treadmill for the nation, in which the People are to do the work—to walk round and round to put it in motion—while the cunning managers are to direct all its power to their own purposes? Would not such an example of the degradation of all popular authority in the Government, of the success of fraud on the part of a few, alienate the affections of the People from our dearly cherished institutions, and beget a spirit in the country, which, in laboring to unseat the power of the triumphant faction, might unsettle the Government itself? What administration could conduct the affairs of the high spirited and intelligent community of American republics, when the chief of it should have attained his power, first by deception and treachery to the People, and next by the vilest collusion, traffic, and prostitution, among political confederates? Could there be more forms of a violated constitution prevent a wronged and insulted nation of freemen from rising in revolt to resume their rightful control in the Government; and would not be anarchy which has marked the triumph of fraud and force in the South American republics, fall on us with its curse of continual revolution?

Mr. VAN BUREN. The federal prints teem with charges against Mr. Van Buren's character, (for in his conduct they can find nothing to reproach,) representing him as narrow minded and selfish in the extreme, incapable of generous feeling, or of attachment to men and principles from any other than narrow views of immediate advantage to himself. These charges are not attempted to be proved by any sufficient evidence, and a denial of their truth is met by a simple repetition of the falsehood. Now we undertake to say that as far as facts are concerned, there is not in the public eye a man who so little merits these charges of cold and selfish policy, as Mr. Van Buren. Desertion of a friend and injustice to an enemy are two things of which Mr. Van Buren was never accused. To an almost romantic attachment to friends and an adherence to political principles, entirely unyielding, he adds an urbanity of manner to his political opponents which is probably possessed by no other public man in this country. The very first step of his life is one of the most remarkable instances of firm attachment to principle on record. He was surrounded by federal influence. He was courted and carressed by some of the greatest men who ever acted as leaders of the federal party, which was at that time in a large majority in his native country. Every inducement was held out to him to take that then popular side in politics; but neither the allurements of wealth and office or the promises and persuasions of the great could lure him for a moment from a zealous advocacy of those great principles of Democracy, which he had labored from a study of the political writings of the founders of the democratic party and the prevalence of which he considered essential to the preservation of the rights and liberties of the people. It is true that he did not abuse the proffered favor which he could not accept—on the contrary he met and acknowledged the friendship of his would-be benefactors with all the returns not inconsistent with a firm adherence to the principles of democracy; and though he was subsequently separated from them, politically, as far as the East is from the West, he has ever remained on terms of personal friendship with them and received repeated testimonials of their highest respect for his integrity and talents.

The friends of Mr. Van Buren are of that stamp which few other men possess. They are men of the strictest political and private integrity; of enlarged and comprehensive views; utterly above the desire of office or of wealth, or of any thing that power can bestow—in fine, men who make friends from any other than what are usually denominated selfish motives. They are not the mere sunshine friends who are the dangers on of the powerful and the great—in such men, though they have at times surrounded him, Mr. Van Buren has never confided—but friends whose attachment has abided—may, been strengthened, by persecution and defeat. Such a friend par excellence, and by the acknowledgment of all, is B. F. BUTLER, the present Attorney General of the United States; and scores of others of the same stamp might be named who are the fast friends of Mr. Van Buren, and who became attached to him, not from the desire of power or office, but by talents which excited their respect, and integrity and patriotism and manly virtue, which won their affection and esteem. Are these such friends as selfish and intriguing men draw around them? Were the venerable Judge SMITH of Alabama and the venerable NATHANIEL MAISON of North Carolina, men whose purity and independence and patriotism even a reckless party press has never attempted to suspect—over known to attach themselves to such a man as Mr. Van Buren is represented to be by his political opponents? Could these distinguished men and many others have formed the strong attachment to Mr. Van Buren which they are known to entertain in preference to other public men from their own section of country, unless his character and conduct had afforded them indubitable evidence of qualities of mind and heart eminently deserving their esteem and friendship?

We have one more item of testimony to present before we leave this subject—a sufficient answer in itself, to every one of the charges above adverted to against Mr. Van Buren's character. Taken in connexion with his well known popularity in his own State—a State which he could always carry at the polls against any competitor however formidable—it completely demolishes the whole ground-work on which the piebald party profess to found their opposition to him. We refer to the unanimous testimonial to the integrity and estimable character of Mr. Van Buren, given by the New York Legislature, on his retirement from the office of Governor of New York, to accept a station in Gen. Jackson's first cabinet. The man who can believe that such a character as his enemy's attribute to Mr. Van Buren could have elicited from a body of men, among whom were many decided political opponents, an unanimous expression of respect and esteem, can believe any thing that ought not to be believed.—Age.

We are right glad to see the tone of the Republican press of New Hampshire, just on the eve of the assembling of the State Legislature. There seems to be but one sentiment there—a determination to grant no more Bank charters, but to commence restricting the issue circulation of small bills. It seems to us—that the policy is little short of suicidal to legislate to prohibit small bills for the purpose of procuring a specie currency in their stead, while at the same time, banks are created, and an influence in time, built up, to repeal it. This is one of the most prominent reasons why we regret the result of our own legislation last winter. The true policy, and the safest, is to take a firm stand against additional Banking corporations, and to reclaim for the people their fair share of the circulation, in gold and silver. The multistation of Banks in nearly every State for the last two years, clearly points out this as the only safe and practicable safeguard for the equal rights of the people.

The Journal of Commerce says—The instalments of the French Indemnity now due, are probably before this time on their way to the United States, in specie. Four instalments, out of six, we believe are now due. Consequently the amount to be received at this time is 15,666,664 francs, or about $3,000,000.—Id.

OXFORD DEMOCRAT.

Paris, May 24, 1836.

REPUBLICAN NOMINATIONS.

FOR PRESIDENT.

MARTIN VAN BUREN, of N. York.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT.

RICHARD M. JOHNSON, of Kentucky.

PROPOSAL. Our friends who are indebted to us for the Democratic more than one year, are respectfully requested to settle the same. Our Advertising friends whose accounts are of more than three months standing would confer a favor by advancing the same.

The S. J. C. met held in this County last week, adjourned on Thursday evening. The questions of law were disposed of on the first day. Solomon Carter, who was confined in Jail on charge of murder, was indicted for manslaughter only. A continuance was asked for by his counsel, and granted on the ground of the absence of a material witness. He was ordered to recognize in the sum of $1500, with a surety in the like sum. He has not yet obtained bail. Marshal & Hiram Andrews were indicted for passing counterfeit money. John O. Deane, their accomplice, who had turned State evidence, and was used as a witness before the Justice, absconded, and forfeited his recognizance, $500. Each of the Andrews' gave bail in the like sum with sureties. The indictment contained five counts. The first of which was for having in their possession ten counterfeit bills, was not sustained by the evidence. The second count, was for having in possession, with an intent to pass, four counterfeit bills on the Kendallbank Bank; and each of the other three counts was for passing a counterfeit bill to different individuals. The defendants had succeeded in obtaining possession of all the bills we believe except one, so that they could not be fully described in the indictment. They severally pleaded not guilty. In the course of the forenoon the Attorney General gave notice that before the adjournment of the Court at noon, he should move that the bonds of the defendants be increased, stating that he was apprehensive that they would avoid before the verdict was rendered. This motion was opposed by the defendants counsel, and the Court declined granting the motion then, as was afterwards stated, lest it might prejudice the defendants in the minds of the Jury, as carrying an intimation that the Court thought them guilty. The defendants were observed to leave the Court about twelve o'clock, before the evidence was closed on the part of the government. At the opening of the Court in the afternoon they were not to be found. Their counsel under these circumstances, declined arguing the case to the jury, and it was submitted under the direction of the Court. They were found guilty on all the Counts in the indictment except the first. They were defaulted on their recognizance and a capias issued for their apprehension. They have not yet been taken. Simon C. Gleason, who was under an indictment for counterfeiting silver coin, and Rich who had been convicted of the same offence were severally defaulted on their recognizance.

We have received the first number of a new paper published at Brunswick in this State, called the Registrar, which professes to advocate the principles and support the cause of democracy. Its appearance is respectable and we welcome it as an ally in defending the rights of the people.

By a prospectus published in this day's paper our readers are informed that the Eastern Magazine published at Bangor, and the Portland Magazine are to be united and published hereafter at Bangor, under the name of the Maine Magazine. It is to be under the care of Samuel K. Gilman as Editor, and Mrs. Ann S. Stephens who has heretofore conducted the Portland Magazine, is engaged to contribute to its columns. We think this arrangement will be a decided improvement, and that their united efforts will render the publication an interesting and valuable one, well deserving the liberal support of the people of this State, and more especially entitled to the patronage of our female readers.

We have often had occasion to regret that the narrow limits of our weekly sheet, has prevented us from gratifying our readers with many things the perusal of which has furnished us with both profit and delight. Among the things that have from this cause alone been excluded from our columns, was an edition of the speech of Mr. Benton on his resolutions for expunging from the Journal of the Senate the condemnation of the President for removing the deposits, passed during the memorable panic Session of that body. Notwithstanding the length of this speech, its eloquence and force of argument are such as to make it deserving the attentive perusal of all the friends of the administration. It displays in no enviable light the motives and conduct of the actors in that scene, and the opposition press have found it much more convenient to sneer at than to answer or refute the charges and arguments therein contained. For that effort Mr. Benton deserves the thanks of the democracy of the whole country, and he will receive them.

Francis Brinley Jr. of Boston, and Lyman Rawson of Rumford, Esquires, were admitted to practise as Counsellors in the S. J. Court at the Term holden in this place last week.

Better News from Texas. We learn from a slip from the office of the New Orleans Bulletin, dated April 24th, that the Texan Government schooner Invincible, had arrived there, bringing information that 1200 Mexicans had crossed the Colorado—800 men at San Felipe, and 400 at Fort Bend; that Gen. Houston's executive force was 2300. The Colorado had overflew its banks, and the 12 hundred Mexicans cannot retreat. Houston had despatched Maj. Baker with 400 men against 400 Mexicans, and was advancing himself with his whole force upon the Mexican division, whose retreat to the main army was impossible. The total destruction of the 1200 was deemed certain. We also learn that 73 unarmed emigrants, who left New Orleans for Copano, and were landed at that port, trusting themselves unarmed in the power of the Mexicans, were in two hours butchered by the soldiery.

Dr. Harrison, son of Gen. Harrison of North Bend, Ohio, was, while travelling with three American Gentlemen, taken by the Mexicans, horribly mutilated, his body cut down, and his life was extinct! The wife of Dr. Harrison was passenger in the Invincible. The Invincible fell in with the Mexican selar, Montezuma, at anchor off the Santiago. An action immediately took place, with a running fight of several hours, which terminated in the sinking of the Montezuma before she reached the shore to which she was running. She was prepared to convey to Galveston Bay about 2,000 men; the expedition is now destroyed.—The Invincible had not a man wounded. [The Mexican account of the engagement above referred to, states that the action resulted without loss.]

Latest from Texas.

The New Orleans Bee publishes intelligence from Quintana, mouth of Brasos, to the 16th April. Twelve hundred Mexicans were passing to Brasos at Fort Bend; Gen. Houston, with about the same number, was within a few miles, to attack them. All were confident of the success of Houston. The Bee says the fate of Fanning's men is confirmed.

The Journal of Commerce has the following extract of a letter from an officer of the U. S. army dated:

Fort Jessup, April 12, 1836.

The accounts from Texas are truly distressing. Col. Fanning's command, there is no doubt, has been entirely destroyed by the Mexican army. A report reached Naacogdoches that the Indians and Mexicans were in large force to the north of that city, and ready to fall upon the defenceless inhabitants. In consequence these people have fled to the Sabine River (at Gaines' ferry) in crowds. The river is very high and great difficulty is experienced in crossing them over. The road between this place and the Sabine has been crowded with families fleeing from the savage Mexicans and less savage Indians. General Gaines left here to-day with 14 companies, for the purpose, I suppose of preventing the incursion of Mexican forces on our side of the Sabine river. The general is too prudent to involve us in a war, unless he has a proper and just cause. Therefore, we calculate upon having an active campaign, but not fighting. I say to you, that a large force is to be in the field on this frontier, and consequently we must be active.

GREAT NEWS FROM TEXAS.

The subjoined news, which we hope may be true, we find in the New York Commercial Advertiser of Tuesday evening.

Great news from the Texan Army—A General Battle—Santa Anna and Cos taken Prisoners with all their officers—One half of the Mexican Army destroyed—Triumph of General Houston, with loss of only six men killed and twenty wounded.

We have this morning received through the New Orleans papers the unexpected and astounding news of the complete success of the Texan army, under General HOUSTON, over the Mexican Army commanded by General SANTA ANNA; himself, his brother and second in command, General Cos, and their officers, taken prisoners, with the loss of 700 men killed and 500 taken prisoners. This body formed the largest of two divisions of the Mexicans, the two bodies being divided by the river Brasos, whose sudden rise prevented their junction. The accounts are from various and respectable sources, and there is little in them of a conflicting character. It is a fair inference, therefore, that they are substantially true.

POSTSCRIPT.

CONFIRMATION. Since the above was in type, we are assured that a letter has been received by a mercantile house in this city, dated New Orleans, 3d May, at the closing of the mail; that the steamboat Romeo had that morning arrived at New Orleans from Natchitoches confirming all the particulars as related in the foregoing paragraph.

A letter had been received at New Orleans from General Houston himself, dated April 20th, a few hours before the battle, in which he states that Gen. Santa Anna was marching on him with an army of 1500 men, and that he had placed his troops in ambush to cut them off.

UNITED STATES AND FRANCE.

The following message was received from the President of the U. S., and read.

Washington, May 10, 1836.

To the Senate and House of Representatives: Informaion has been received at the Treasury Department that the four instalments under our treaty with France have been paid to the agent of the United States. In communicating this satisfactory termination of our controversy with France, I feel assured that both Houses of Congress will unite with me in desiring and believing, that the anticipation of a restoration of the ancient cordial relations between the two countries, expressed in my former messages on this subject, will be speedily realized. No proper exertion of mine shall be wanting to efface the remembrance of those misconceptions that have temporarily interrupted the accustomed intercourse between them.

ANDREW JACKSON.

This message was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

THE TWO MONUMENTS! Bunker's Hill and Mount Benedict—both monuments of disgrace!—The one proving that the glory of our ancestors, which should inspire us, exists not in our breasts in sufficient strength, to make us place the capstone upon the obelisk erected to bellow the remembrance of their deeds—the other an evidence that respect for the laws of those ancestors has fled—and that nothing exists to stay the hand of violence—to guard the inviolable rights of our citizens. The stain of the former may be wiped away, let it be speedily done!—Who shall rob the latter of its enormity—and erase from it its stain?—Boston Galaxy.

minated in the
she reached
ing. She was Bay about 2
destroyed,
ounded,
the engagement
action resulted

nes intelligence
s, to the 16th
ns were passing Houston, with
in a few miles,
ent of the suc-
eys the fate of

the following
of the U. S.

12, 1836.
truly distress-
there is no
by the Alex-Naegedoches
were in large
d ready to fall

In conse-
to the Sabine
s. The river
s experienced
between this crowded with Mexicans and lives left here
the purpose, I
on of Mexican river. The us in a war,
use. There is active cano-
you. that is
this frontier,
ve.

EXAS.
hope may be
commercial Ad-

—A General
taken Pris-
one half of
umph of Gen-
s men killed

I through the expected and SUCCESS of STON, over
by general
brother and
and their ofs of 700 men
This body
of the Mex-
by the river
their junc-
reous and re-
ie in them of
inference,
ly true.

he above was ter has been
this city, da-
e closing of neo had that
from Natchi-
as related

New Orleans
d April 20th,
which he states
on him that he had
them off.

RANCE.
received from
d.

10, 1836.
representatives
the Trans-
ments under
paid to the communicating controversy
of Houses of h Houses of restoration of the two messages on lized. No
nting to ef-
conceptions
e accustom-

CKSON,
the Com-
dered to be

er's Hill and
of disgrace!
our ances-
s not in our
s we place
d to follow
the other an-
those an-
ists to stay
e inevitable
the former
lly done!—
and lacy.

STENOGRAPHIC GLIMPSES OF CONGRESS.

From the Eastern Argus.

WASHINGTON, May, 13.

The Senate met, and adjourned to the race course, or, more properly speaking, a quorum probably met at the course, and will adjourn to the Senate to-morrow. It does not sound very well to have it said, that the important business of the nation was neglected by any of the Senate, that they might attend a horse race! But what other inference can be drawn from the fact, that it was race-day, and there was not a quorum present, for the transaction of business?

House. This being a day for Private Bills, a great number were passed, probably in consequence of the House being thin, as there were less than a hundred most of the time, the rest, probably, having gone to the races. It was vaguely remarked by a gentleman, that if the races should continue a week longer, all the business of the session would be accomplished.

Ex-President Adams, after the reading of the Journal, asked leave to make an explanation on an article in the Globe, and the rules of the House were set aside for this purpose. He said it would be recollected that a debate arose on Saturday concerning the boundary in the Treaty of February 22d, 1819, negotiated by him, as a Northern man, to exclude certain territory lest it might become a slave State, &c. He restated in substance what he said on Saturday, that the treaty was negotiated under the eye, and by the direction of Mr. Monroe, a slave-holder, &c. that Mr. M. consulted his cabinet; that he (Mr. A.) was the last who consented to the concession of territory, and the only one that opposed it; that he held out for every claim, till ordered by his superior to recede; that before the treaty was definitely concluded, before the United States was obliged to sign, he called on Gen. Jackson, by the direction of the President, and left with him the treaty, for his examination, especially as it regarded the boundary, the only material point in question [then, or now.] Mr. A. said he spoke from memory, after sixteen or seventeen years; that Gen. Jackson returned the treaty, after one or two days, with his approbation; if he did deny it he would produce evidence of the fact of a different nature. But, (continued Mr. A.) it has been in a manner denied by the Printer of this House, and the organ of the Executive. He then repeated in substance an article in the Globe, stating that the President had no recollections about the treaty, &c. Mr. A. said this statement was not denied; but that nameless person, members of Congress, implied by the conversations, that Gen. J. was consulted as a military man, and as to Florida. Mr. A. said it was not as to Florida—the treaty embraced both Floridas,—this was not the subject of debate; the object earnestly desired, (and the result of the concession,) was nothing as to Florida, but was wholly as to the propriety of the concession. There was no denial by the President; but the official printer of the Executive, and this House, in consequence of the President not recollecting, as undertaken to make a question of his (Mr. A.'s) veracity; he could not enter into a controversy—called the official printer the Ambassador of the Executive, and hoped the House would not think he ought to enter into a defence of his veracity, &c.—Mr. A. made some remarks relative to the two reports of his speech on Saturday, that were brought to him, and of a correction he made, as to the time the treaty was handed to Gen. Jackson, which was at or near the signing of the treaty. He then read the article in the Globe of this morning and commented on it.

II Gen. Jackson left the city on the 11th February and the treaty was sent to Don Onís on the 13th—it was under negotiation three months before it was submitted for signature—taking it to Gen. J. was the last act. Mr. Adams said he kept daily minutes of these transactions, and his Journal was at his residence in Quincy, and he could not therefore consult the evidence now. He thought he had satisfied the House, that there was no material statement of his controverted by the Globe.

Mr. Huntsman made a reply, but he wholly misunderstood Mr. Adams, in supposing that he charged the President with denying his statements.

REIS FENDEL.

From the Maine Democrat.

HON. JANEZ BRADBURY.

Died in Hollis on the 13th inst. Hon. JANEZ BRADBURY, aged 43 years—a member of the Executive Council of this State.

The death of Mr. Bradbury in the prime of life, favored with a vigorous and active body, to which illness had been almost a stranger—in the possession of the reward of successful industry, a comfortable independence, and in the enjoyment of the favor and confidence of his fellow citizens, holding one of the most responsible offices within their gift, cut off by a sickness of less than a single week,—feelingly reminds us of the uncertainty of life, and of all its blessings and honors.

In him thus suddenly taken from the midst of us, we have an example of what native talent, unwearied industry, and unbending integrity, united by superior early education, or the inheritance of property, may accomplish in our favored country. His means of education were not beyond what our common schools afford,—and during many years of the earlier part of his life, he labored with his own hands, with an assiduity and to an extent truly astonishing, and which very few have the inclination to imitate, if they had the physical ability to do it. He was scrupulously honest in his dealings exact in the performance of all his engagements, and economical in his expenses, (though of a generous disposition and willing to assist others.

Though he early reaped the reward of a life thus spent, a competency, which enabled him to dispense with a portion of his extraordinary labor, still the same energy and activity continued, though applied in a different direction.

He was successively employed as a Town Officer, as a representative in the Legislature, two years as a senator of his Country two years, and two years as a member of the Council to advise the Governor. In all these were found the same energy and strength of mind, and the same active, industrious application to business, which had before been given to the work of his hands. Thus placed among the most distinguished men in our State, of all his associates felt and acknowledged his usefulness and his influence. With only such advantages, Mr. Bradbury became able to impart his information and express his views on paper with clearness and propriety, in a degree not always equalled by the educated. And as a member of the Legislature he took part in the debates, and gave to others his original, sound, practical, just and forcible views, in a manner which commanded more attention and produced greater effect, than most long set speeches. In his political principles he was a Democrat. He espoused them in youth and maintained them throughout his whole life.—Always consistent and decided, always firm, he was a man to be relied upon in an emergency. Disappointment did not sour him, temptations could not seduce him.

His family—but we will not speak of their loss. It cannot be made up to them—and his numerous circles of friends—they will long lament that one so kind, so benevolent, so public spirited, so useful, is now no more.

From the Charleston Patriot.

THE FLORIDA CAMPAIGN TERMINATED.

Latest from Florida—Termination of the Indian Campaign. Lieut. Van Buren, Aid to General Scott, and Capt. Finley; Aid to General Eustis, arrived here this forenoon from Picolata, via Savannah, in the steam packet William Seabrook, from Savannah. We have conversed with both these gentlemen, who have politely imparted to us all the information they possessed.

Lieut. Van Buren states that, owing to the commencement of the warm weather, the campaign had been brought to a close. The regular forces had gone into summer quarters at St. Augustine. There were supposed to be about 200 on the sick list at Tampa Bay, and eighty at Volusia.

Captain Finley has communicated to us the following intelligence:—

"The left wing of the army of Florida arrived at Tampa Bay on the 5th of April, left there on the 17th, and marched to Volusia, by Pinalikaha. The active operations of the campaign have ceased, from the sickly season having commenced. The South Carolina volunteers left Volusia on Friday, 29th, to march to St. Augustine, where Colonel Brisbane's regiment would be dismissed, and sent by transports to this city. Col. Goodwin's mounted men would be discharged at Jacksonville. The regulars, it is believed, will be kept in Florida, to Garrison posts which may be important in the commencement of the next campaign. The Indians were no where in any force, and are supposed to be scattered all over the territory."

Correspondent of the New York Daily Advertiser.

SHOCKING SCENE.

DERIVING A NEGRO ALIVE.

St. Louis, April 29th, 1836.

One of the most shocking and revolting transactions occurred in our city last evening about 9 o'clock, which has ever been witnessed in our country. The circumstances, as near as I can learn them, are as follows: A colored man, belonging to one of the Steamboats, was taken in custody by the Deputy Sheriff, Mr. Hammond; and one of the constables named Mull, for some disorderly conduct. They had entered the Court House yard when the negro struck Mr. Hammond on the chin with a large knife, which glanced and cut the main artery, so that he died in a few seconds. He then turned and struck at Mr. Mull, cut him in the abdomen so badly, that his life is despaired of. The negro fled & took shelter under a shed; and warned his pursuers from approaching him. One of them, however, with a brick bat broke his right arm—his knife dropped—he immediately took it in his left hand, and made several attempts to stab those who took him. He was then lodged in jail.

A number of the citizens soon collected, and were so exasperated that they demanded the keys of the jail, or they would demolish the house. Resistance being useless, he delivered them up. They took him out, and with nearly unanimous voice, resolved to burn him!

They then chained him to a tree at a short distance from the Court House, and placed under him a large heap of dry rails, which they fired, and one of the most revolting scenes ensued, that has ever been witnessed here. The shrieks and groans of the victim were loud and piercing, and to observe one limb after another drop into the fire, was awful indeed. He was about fifteen minutes in dying. I visited the place this morning, and saw his body, or the remains of it, at the place of execution. He was burnt to a cinder. His legs and arms were gone, and only a part of his head and body were left. The scene was too sickening to contemplate, and I left it.

I have only time to add, that while numbers here depreciate the manner in which it was effected, they think his crime so heinous, that terrible as its punishment was, it was merited.

An Escape.—The Editor of the Kennebec Journal says he has not the "misfortune" to be personally acquainted with the late editor of the Bangor Whig. "We noticed his connexion with the Whig with regret, and declined his offer to write for the Journal." "We have long had little confidence in his judgment, and less in his integrity." "We wanted nothing to do with a man who is more than suspected of forging a public document. We had not forgotten his pretended letter from Mr. Jefferson, eulogizing Mr. Clay and the American system. That letter was charged upon him in the Richmond Enquirer as a forgery. Southworth never disproved the charge except by his unsupported assertion," says the Journal. How the Whigs "use up" each other. Not content with practising falsehood and deception against their opponents, the force of habit induces them to deceive each other. The opposition editors undoubtedly draw correct likenesses of one another, their candidates and their party. Let them go on and we will enjoy the sport. The "whigs have no honest principle in common to bind them together," is the assertion of John Quincy Adams.—East. Rep.

The Globe proves, incontrovertibly, that the public revenues in the New York deposit Banks has furnished the basis of accommodations to the commercial community, so far as they could be safely employed for that purpose.—The opposition on this subject present a curious medley of inconsistencies. At one time and for one purpose—they pronounce the deposits locked up from the use of the mercantile community, at another purpose, they declare the deposit Banks unable to refund the revenue at the demand of the Treasury Department.—lb.

Counterfeit Money. We understand that the examination was held before F. A. Fuller Esq. at Stillwater, on Wednesday, upon the person of one Norcross, in whose chest was found about $200 in counterfeit bills of the Waldo Bank. He was suspected of having offered one or more bills of the denomination of $5, but no proof appearing, he was discharged. With regard to the bills found in the chest, he testified that the chest was held in common as a deposit for goods and chattels belonging to himself and one Davis, and the money belonged to D. who had disappeared previous to the examination.—Bangor Whig.

EDITORIALS.—so called. Walsh in his preface to his Didactics, says to this effect:—that the discerning reader should never judge of the correctness of an Editor's style, or his knowledge of the purity of his language, by his editorial articles. There is so much truth in this, (not sufficiently regarded) that it is worthy of remark. An Editor must fill his sheet—no matter what personal vexations he may have to disturb the sober current of his thoughts—no matter what palsy sickness may be revelling upon his frame—or whether he be sad or weary—the variety, the strength, the richness which are the characteristics of his better efforts will be expected of him—and he must drive from him every care, and school his feelings to the task. Again, what an exhaustion of mental exertion would ensue, should editorial articles long and short, be penned with the utmost care, and sentences be finished, and periods be rounded according to the strict rules of rhetoric and grammar!—We do not mean that they are to be deemed of no importance; but would pity the unfortunate wight who would conceive it necessary to aim at undeviating correctness in these respects.

No—enough of the character of an Editor's mind, of his depth of thought, his exactness of expression, his trustworthiness, and ability may be gathered from his editorials, without measuring his sentences with the square and compass.

The Pittsburg Times has a remark in print: "There is almost the same difference between writing poetry and scribbling editorial that there is between executing marble statuary and modelling gingerbread. The one is for immortality, and the other for present consumption; and as the man who would elaborate his editorial work as fastidiously as poetry ought to be composed would show about as much sense as the gingerbread baker who would model his figures like statuary. And then the intensity which is vital for poetry—an editor would be sent to Bedlam if caught 'commencing with the skies,' as Milton has it.—lb.

MARRIED.

In Dixfield, on the 16th of April, by John Holman Esq. Mr. Merrill Holman to Miss Mariann Knight—also on the 5th of May, Mr. Wm. Wood to Miss Harriet Kenney.

In Portland, Mr. Henry C. Lowell to Miss Mary L. Greay.

In North-Yarmouth, Mr. Jmmi Storer to Miss Jane Q. Read, of Westbrook.

DIED.

In Portland, 11th inst. Mr. Anthony Berry, of Philadelphia, aged 66.

In Madison, 25th ult. David Rowell, Esq. formerly of Manchester N. H. aged 69.

Drowned in Sandy Stream, near Moose Head Lake 11th ult. Mr. Hiram Ellis, of Mercer; aged 23.

In East Machias, Peter Talbot, Esq. aged 92.

Freedom.

I the subscriber, hereby relinquish to my son CORAM B. LAYBOON, his time from and after the date hereof until he arrives at the age of 21 years,—hereby giving him full power to receive his own earnings and make his own contracts; not holding myself responsible for any debts by him contracted from and after this date.

EMERSON HAYGOOD.

Waterford, May 13, 1836.

JOE WORK.

NEATLY EXECUTED AT THIS OFFICE.

PILLS.

DEAN'S Thayer's, and Lee's PILLS, just received (Globe) and for sale by S. CROCKETT & Co. Paris-Hill, March 14, 1836.

NEW GOODS.

HUBBARD & HOWE,

(Norway-Village.)

HAVE just received from Boston, a prime assortment of NEW GOODS, which will be sold at very low prices, among which are the following, viz:—

Broadcloths, Blue, Black, Mulberry, Charat, Brown, Green, Dahlia, and Andulaid.

CASSIMERES, Super Black, Lavender, Blue, Stone, Drab, and Light.

SILKS, Blue, Black, and Blue-black, Gros de Swiss, col'd poul de Soie de, Gros de Nap'do, Synshaw, light, fig'd, plain, ribbed, and changeable.

FLAURENCES, Striped, plaid, &c.—Pompey, Silk serge, &c.—Ladies and Gents. Hugs—Coloured and white Glovers, Kid, beaver, and deerskin do.

GINGHAMS, Striped, plaid, plain, and check.—Silk and cotton Cravats, and pocket H'd's.—Table cloths, crash, linens, cambric, muslin, linen cambric, linen, sheeting, and shirting, bleached and unbleached.

CALICOES, 50 pieces English, French, and American, of various figures, colours, qualities, and prices.

BAGGIES, Bobinet, Grecian, Lace Footing, Edging, &c.

VESTINGS, Black satin, blue-black, black, changeable, claret, and brown silk Velvet.

India rubber Suspensors, ticking, hating, wicking, warp yarn, cotton thread, sewing silk, pins, needles, &c. &c. &c.

Ladies' and Misses' Fannello and Kid SLIPS.

Gents. Silk and Fur HATS.—W. J. Goodie.—Crockery, Glass, and Hardware.

JOKE'S Tools of every description, with a great variety of other articles usually kept in a country Store, which they offer to the public for inspection, respectfully soliciting a share of patronage; and will sell as low for cash, or in exchange for lumber or produce, as can be purchased elsewhere. "No MISERABLE" Purchasers who are desirous of a Good Bargain are most respectfully invited to call and examine for themselves.

May 17th, 1836.

is if 40

DOCT. J. M. BUCK would inform the inhabitants of Paris and vicinity, that he has so far recovered his health that he will be happy to wait on those who may favor him with a call.

Paris, May 16.

Commissioners' Notice.

W. E. having been appointed by the Judge of Probate for the County of Oxford, to receive and examine the claims of the creditors to the estate of RICHARD HEATH, late of Hiram, said county, deceased, whose estate is represented insolvent; give notice, that six months commencing the first day of March last, have been allowed to said creditors to bring in and prove their claims; and that he will attend the service assigned us at the Post-office in said Hiram, on the fourth Monday of June next, and on the fourth Monday of the two following months, from one to five o'clock, P. M.

Dated this nineteenth day of May, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six.

W. E. GOODNOW, ALPHEUS SPRING.

3 41

Farm for Sale.

SITUATED on the Androscoggin River in Rumford, containing 170 acres of upland and about 55 acres of Intervale. Said farm is well watered, and situated one mile and a half from Rumford Point, and same distance from the centre of the town, with good and convenient buildings, and a thrifty Young Orchard on the same. The whole or part of said farm will be sold as may suit purchasers, and a credit given for one half of the purchase money.

Rumford, May 11, 1836.

COLMAN, GODWIN.

3 40

NOTICE.

THE subscriber having hired the CARDING MACHINES at South Paris, formerly owned by Col. H. R. Parsons, and put them in complete order for carding wool, would respectfully invite the citizens of Paris and vicinity to favor him with a share of their custom.

South Paris, May 11th, 1836.

ZEBBEE PERRY.

7 40

More New Books.

JUST received and for Sale at the OXFORD BOOK-STORE.

Mrs. Hemans' Poems.—Mrs. Sigourney's Poems.—Rosamond.—Young Willie's Book.—Young Lady's Sunday Book.—Letters of Adam Clarke.—Letters of a London Clergyman.—Sabbath School Teacher.—Twe & its Frills.—Peep of Day.—Dover the Hills.—Bay & Birds.—Parley's Ornithology.—Village Boys.—Parley's History U. S. for children.—The House I live in.—Parley's Sketch Book.—Spring's Hints.—The Pillow.—Two Apprentices.—Redeemer's Tears.—Card Cases.—Visiting Cards.—Parley, &c. &c. Also a new lot of Spectacles, Silver Thimbles, Gold Jewelry, &c.

W. E. GOODNOW, Norway-Village, May 9, 1836.

17 39

Notice.

NOTICE from the Barn of the subscriber in Paris, on Wednesday the 27th day of April last, a HORSE five years old this spring, said horse is of a Light Bay color, white hind feet, white stripe in his face, and short tail. Whoever will return said horse, or give information so that he may be obtained, to either of the subscribers, shall be suitably rewarded, and all necessary charges paid.

STEPHEN ROBINSON, Paris. CLEB CUSHMAN, Jr. Buckfield, 3 39

HUTCHINS'

COMPOUND RENOVATOR, OR CHEMICAL SOAP.

FOR cleaning Coat Collars, Wearing Apparel of all kinds from spots, occasioned by Oil, Tar, Varnish, Wheel or Gudgeon Grease and Paints, and removing spots from Furniture.

Likewise, it is an excellent remedy for bruises, sprains, cuts, and other eruptions upon the face, chest, and arms, or chapped hands. For places chafed by the harness or saddle upon horses it is also a superior composition.

From the successful & satisfactory experiments which have been made of this preparation, it ran with the utmost safety be recommended to the public as far exceeding any other of the kind, for removing spots of grease, paint, &c. however long they may have been on, and for brightening and refreshing the colors without destroying the fibre or injuring the texture of the cloth.

For Sale at the Oxford Bookstore, by W. E. GOODNOW, Norway-Village, March 1, 1836.

31a—Hornet 8

NOTICE.

THE Subscriber would inform the public that he has the Store in South Paris lately occupied by Mr. CYRUS THAYER, where he intends to keep a general assortment of Goods as is usually kept in a country Store and would most respectfully solicit a share of public patronage.

JOSEPH CUMMINGS, Jr. South Paris Jan. 23 1836.

NOTICES

of the

Maine Monthly Magazine,

COMPRISING

The Portland Magazine and The Eastern Magazine.

ON the first day of July next, will be issued the first number of The Maine Monthly Magazine Edited by CHARLES GILMAN.

In order to form a Magazine worthy of support, and creditable to a State, which, in other points of view, is attaining an important rank in the Confederacy, the Proprietors of The Portland Magazine, and The Eastern Magazine, have deemed it expedient to unite these two periodicals under the above general title, and to publish the united work simultaneously at Portland and Bangor. The contributors to the pages of these Magazines comprise some of the best writers in the Union, who, it is confidently expected, will continue their efforts. Arrangements have also been made to add others to the list, whose names are favorably known in the public of letters. Mrs. Ann S. Stephens, having relinquished the editorial department to Charles Gilman, Esq. who has for five months past conducted The Eastern Magazine, will travel the present season, and will continue her labors as contributor to the Maine Monthly. The Editor will endeavor, with the assistance which he expects to receive, to render the Magazine in every way worthy of a liberal support, and if he should fail of so doing, he trusts that it should not be for want of exertion on his part. To the people of New England, therefore, generally, and to Maine and the two cities in which the Magazine is to be published in particular, the Publishers look for support, and hope that every effort to please will meet with a corresponding reward.

The Maine Monthly Magazine will be published simultaneously, on the first of each month, in Portland and Bangor, at Three Dollars per annum, payable in advance, or on delivery of the third number. A discount will receive a fair discount from the subscription price.

All Communications to be addressed to the Editor or to the care of either of the Publishers as may be most convenient. Letters on business connected with the work to be addressed to either of the Publishers. In all cases, the postage must be paid.

EDWARD STEPHENS, Portland, } Publishers. DUREN & THATCHER, Bangor, }

May, 1836.

41

CAREY'S LIBRARY

CHOICE LITERATURE

Has now completed its first Six Months of publication, and the publishers offer the following works in testimony of the fulfillment of the promises made to the public in the original prospectus.

Life of Sir James Mackintosh, by his Son. Kincaid's Rifle Brigade. Characteristicks of Hindostan, by Miss Roberts. One in a Thousand, by G. P. R. James. Rienzi, by E. L. Bulwer.

Random Recollections of the House of Commons. The Second Volume has commenced with Selections from The Drama of Young Beville, and Confessions & Crimes, or Posthumous Records of a London Clergyman, a work resembling in style, and supposed to be by the same author, as the celebrated Tales from the Diary of a Physician.

The first volume can be had separate, without subscribing to the work, upon the remittance of $2 50 to the publishers.

The Library is published weekly, containing Twenty imperial octavo pages, and the Literary Advertiser, which accompanies it, four pages, and is bound up at the end of every volume. Price per annum, in advance, $5.

Address, E. L. CAREY & A. HART, Or LOUIS A. GODEY, PHILADELPHIA.

CLUBBING.

A remittance of Five Dollars will command the first volume of the Library and the Murray Novels, complete in 8 numbers, containing Peter Simple—Jacob Faithful—Pirate and Three Cutters—King's Own—Newton Foster—Each of Many Tales—and Japhet in Search of his Father.

First Volume of Library and Lady's Book

REBACINIS

OF various kinds constantly for sale at the Oxford Book-Store, just edited the following:

Star's Genuine Vegetable Pulmonary Balsam of Syrup of LIVERFORTH, for the cure of Consumption, Coughs and Colds.

DR. JOHNSON'S Vegetable, Rheumatic and Bilious Elixr, a highly esteemed cordial, in the cure of Rheumatism and Bilious complaints, Indigestion, Constipation, &c. the very best Family Medicine ever offered to the public, containing the best properties of the Hygean and Bevan's Pills. Price 50 cts. a box.

Dr. John's TOOTHACHE DROPS, a cure for the tooth ache. Price 25 cents.

Madam Blau's celebrated WORM ELIXIR, a sure and efficacious remedy for the Worms. Price 50 cents.

Dr. Johnson's American Amalgam Liniment or Ointment, a cure for Rheumatism, Sprains, Bruises, Stiffness in the Joints, Gout, and for Sprains and Ringworms, chafing of the hands, &c. &c. Price 25 cents.

Dr. Johnson's celebrated KID CEMENT, a certain cure for the ITCH, and all disagreeable Humors and Eruptions of the Skin, for Ringworms, Salt Rheum, &c. Price 25 cents.

N. E. Peckoral Syrup and Cough Pill, the best remedy for bad Coughs and Colds, Phthisis, &c. ever invented. Price 50 cents.

British, Hurler, & Caster. Oil S.—Camphor, and Oils of Peppermint, Balaustine, Sassafras, and Essence of almost every description. Price 25 cents.

BALSAM OF LIFE. DR. MOORE'S ESSENCE OF LIFE, an excellent article for Consumption, &c. &c. W. E. GOODNOW, Norway-Village, June 25, 1836.

Commissioners' Notice.

W. L. the subscribers, having been appointed by the Judge of Probate for the County of Oxford, to receive and examine the claims of the creditors to the estate of JOHN BUCK, late of Buckfield in said county, deceased, represented insolvent, hereby give notice, that six months are allowed to creditors to bring in and prove their claims, and that we shall attend the service at the Store of Long & Loring in said Buckfield, on the first Mondays of June and September next, at two o'clock P. M.

ZADOCK LONG, LUCIUS LONG, & G. Buckfield, April 12, 1836.</

